On 12 August top Chinese Communist officials met at the official residence of MAO Tse-tung to discuss the Korean cease-fire talks. It was decided to:

- a. Flatly reject the United Nations proposals regarding the armistice line; prolong the talks as long as may be advantageous, deferring the date for their termination until after the signing of the Japanese peace treaty.
- b. Allocate troops and materials and make military preparations for an offensive, with the object of driving United Nations forces south of the 38th parallel in the event that the cease-fire talks break down.
- c. Intensify the anti-American movement to uproot all American relations in China and eliminate all American ties with cultural, medical and religious organizations in that country.
